Abstract The present research, “A Critical Discourse Analysis of the Linguistic Features of Billboards”, has been accomplished in order to make a comprehensive analysis of the fact how advertising is manipulating and altering the basic philosophies, dogmas, creeds and ideologies of the common people. Advertising is a vast field, and it has influenced the lives of all of us in the last decades. Keeping this factor in view, the researcher has made an attempt to uncover those aspects which remain hidden in the glamorous and eye-catching commercials which contribute to the capitalist’s efforts to make maximum profit by thrusting his products on the customers. The researcher has done the linguistic analysis by using Norman Fairclough’s model of Critical Discourse Analysis (1993) of the billboard advertisements. The researcher has analyzed the language and images used on the billboards and had made an attempt to find out the basic notions for which these linguistic expressions have been used in the boards. For this purpose, he uses various tactics. The sincerity which is illustrated in the billboard advertisements by the advertiser is not factual. The real picture is on the other side.

Introduction

Advertising is an outstanding discourse category in all existing societies of the world and in the society in which we live; it is already a well-established phenomenon. A very significant distinctive characteristic of advertisement discourse is its role because it is constantly persuading people to purchase particular manufactured goods. But at the same time, advertisement transmits information and message to the consumers and only through this do they come to know about any particular product, its value, usefulness and availability. An advertisement not only creates meaning at first but also provokes us to make a deal where it is passed from one thing to another (Williamson, 1983).

It is the use of sign systems and language which distinguishes human beings from animals. Both species can communicate, but humans have sign systems. This sign system is based on logic and reasoning. The sign can take the form of words, gestures, images and objects. These forms are means of communication. Humans utilize these signs to communicate to others. Different symbols are used in logos, billboards and advertisements. These symbols convey a message or meaning to the viewer. Various symbols and signs can be used in advertising. According to Ferdinand de Saussure, language is built up by so many variable signs. The sign is a substantial entity, and he names it “signifier” and “signified”. “Advertisements are so prepared as to move away from the page in which they are developed; they provide contribute to our experiences of life (Fiske, 1990, p. 43).”

The normal customers come across over 6,000 advertising messages daily (Tesky, 2008), and this can be compared to more or less 1500 in 1984 (Rumbo, 2002). This difference shows that today advertising has become a fundamental component of current modern Western civilization. In this way, a culture of consumption is being developed. Now a day's people's identities, values and aspirations are defined by consumerism, not by their citizenship. The societal manipulation and financial supremacy detained by corporations have facilitated them to set up discursive authenticity. Now the people are marginalized and left without an approach to any significant contribution in cultural fabrication. The present study is aimed at a linguistic analysis by using Norman Fairclough's model of Critical Discourse Analysis (1993) of the billboard advertisements.

Literature Review

Human beings learnt the art of trade as the civilization developed, and interaction among various tribes of society started. Different cultures began to come close to one another. Men developed the aptitude of mutual understanding by promoting their own cultures, products and fashions. The earliest modes of advertisement were inscriptions on woods, metals and stones. The traces of wall paintings have been found in India dating back to 4000 BC (Bhatia: 62). The advertising was done orally in China.

The need for advertisement was felt in the 15th century. During the Middle Ages, municipalities and cities began to grow, but the general public was illiterate. So the signs were used for the advertisements. These were of cobbler, blacksmith, miller and tailor used for different items, i.e. boot, diamond, hat and suit respectively. The first printing press was established by William Caxton in England in 1487, and the very first print advertisement was in the English language. Advertisements began to appear in newspapers in the 18th century in England. Promotion of books and newspapers were made in this way. In addition to this, medicines were also advertised through newspapers in England in the 18th century. Thomas J Berret is regarded as the father of modern advertising (Coates: 107-15). He worked for Pears Soap Company in England. In 1920, an advertisement for tobacco was in vogue, and it laid the foundation of modern advertisements by bringing into use modern techniques for advertisements. In the same year the first radio station was established, the advertisements were made to sell radios, and with the passage of time, various nonprofit organizations such as schools, colleges, clubs and public organizations established their own radio stations (Mc Chesney, 1928). With the advancement of radio technology, many organizations started to sponsor the programs on the radio. Before the start of the program, a brief introduction of the company was broadcasted. In the same way, at the end of the program, this practice was repeated (Mc Chesney, 1928).

In 1950, commercial television was started, and the world of advertisements entered a new phase. Now the public watched the advertisements of various products on screen. Many sponsoring firms used this mode for advertising. In the 1980s, cable television was started, and separate channels were introduced for advertising purposes. Such channels can still be watched on TV. It was till 1998 that advertising was done mostly through radio and televisions. Since the 1990s, the internet has occupied a conspicuous place in the modern world, and advertising is being done through it. Since the internet has gained a foremost position in the lives of individuals, advertising agencies are promoting their products through this.

Advertisements in Modern Era

In the modern-day to day world, electronic media has gained supremacy. The people's tastes, choices and aspirations are controlled and directed by the bourgeoisie with the assistance of these electronic devices, which are playing a pivotal role in present-day society in molding the ideologies of the common layman. Media is propagating certain ideologies by rendering a particular culture more elaborative and conspicuous. Advertisements have become an inevitable part of media. As a matter of fact, advertisements are just like the blood of the media. Advertising has both information and amusement in it, and these aspects contribute to their likeability among the customers (Halley & Balldinger, 1991).

The modern world has become a global village. Now international challenges are being faced by various multinational companies. Now the purchaser has also become a global consumer. Consequently, connected consumer ship has created challenges for advertising agencies. It is due to this fact that advertising has become a major area of interest for the huge marketing companies of the world. Consumer behavior can very easily be formed with the help of advertising without having any concern with the quality of the advertised product (Gorn, 1982).

Basic Notions of Advertising

While describing advertising, four factors can be brought to light, that is plan, creativity, execution and media. All these four factors require thinking and wisdom on the part of marketing professionals. These marketing and advertising professionals are solely responsible for the implementation and development of advertising. These ideas are used by the advertising agencies to make their advertising effective and more useful for the common public. In the following, these ideas are described step by step.

Planning

Plan or strategy is used by the advertising agencies and marketing professionals to give directions to the advertisements. These plans or strategies play a key role in the formation of advertisements. The marketing professionals and advertising agents prepare the advertisements to fulfill certain objectives and demands (Fraser, 1992). These advertisements are designed for specific audiences keeping in view their demands and mindsets. So the formation and design of these advertisements should be so as to shape the behaviors of the people.

Creativity

Creativity plays a key and speculative role in the development and formulation of advertisements. Creativity is required everywhere in all fields of life, and the field of advertisement is specific in this regard. New and innovative ideas are presented with a view to grab the attention of the customers and the audience. That is why advertisements are presented with certain ideologies and concepts which are applicable to the minds of the customers or viewers (Fairclough, 1995). Without the idea of creativity, no add can become attractive and eye-grabbing. People are hired by advertising agencies and marketing firms to make their advertisements more innovative. These professional people have expertise in their respective areas, and they work for a specific field.

Execution

Execution of advertisements is also very important. The designs, colors, photographs, writings, settings and acting are all parts of execution. The manners of the depiction of the product reflect the process of execution. If an advertisement is executed properly, keeping in view all the required criteria, that product is liked and appreciated by a lot of customers. Advertising sets the standards for future plans. Advertisements should be so executed as to make them acceptable to the customers, and all abovementioned elements such as color writing and acting play a vital role in the development of the commercials. The process of execution of the advertisement is a complex and intricate phenomenon (Ewen, 1976). The persons who are involved in this process of execution should keep in their minds the liking and disliking of the common public. This is an age of modernism. People have to earn their money with great difficulty. They like to purchase only those products which are not very costly and come within their budgets. Thus the marketing firms and advertising agencies should follow this rule while designing their advertisements.

Social Roles

Advertising has a social effect by giving information about new and innovative products. It also helps the consumers to make a comparison between different items. The advertising agencies use different celebrities in their advertisements. These celebrities are a source of attention for the common public. The people watch them using certain items and get inspiration in this way. The consumers keep themselves in their places and feel elevated. They think that they will become as attractive and eye-catching as these models are. In addition to this, advertising introduces new, innovative and groundbreaking elements in society (Weatherall, 2002). It introduces fashion and modern tendencies in society. It is human nature to be attracted by fashion and up to date ideas. Thus advertising fulfils this demand of the people living in modern society. Besides this, advertising has an educational role in society. It teaches people how to use certain products. It is with the help of advertising that they can be able to make use of those products and items which were unknown to them prior to their utilization.

Framework

Norman Fairclough's Model of Critical Discourse Analysis (1993)

Norman Fairclough, who is considered to be the founder of CDA is a professor of linguistics at Lancaster University. Fairclough is deeply interested in the fact of how collective societal practices are formed and how they affect the lives of individuals.

The researcher has used the Fairclough model of discourse analysis 1993 to make the stylistic analysis of the linguistic and metalinguistic features of billboards. Fairclough's model elaborates the fact that all social practices are related to particular historical perspectives, and obtainable and current societal connections are duplicated in the shadow of these past social norms and practices. It is a matter of interest. There are so many questions regarding this with particular relation to the positioning of text and serving of interests and negation of interests as well. Fairclough's model of critical discourse analysis brings into various light aspects which were helpful for the stylistic analysis of linguistic and metalinguistic features of billboards.

This model consists of three interconnected procedures of the study, which are related to three interconnected facets of discourse.

1. The item of analysis. It can be visual or visual text.
2. This procedure refers to the way or method of how this particular object or item is reproduced. It can be in the form of writing, designing or speaking and reading or manipulating by the audience or the receptors of the messages.
3. The socio-historical contexts and circumstances that direct these procedures.

Fairclough says that each of the above-mentioned elements needs diverse types of analysis. These types are in the following

1. Analysis of text which is regarded as description.
2. Procedural analysis, which is regarded as interpretation.
3. Societal analysis, which is regarded as an explanation.

Signifiers play a key role in this approach. They structure a text, particular linguistic choices and their progression. Along with this fact, socio-historical aspects should also be kept in mind while making selections. In other words, it can be opined that texts are illustrations of publicly synchronized discourse. Side by side, another fact to be noted is that the procedures of production, transmission and reception of messages are communally controlled. The researcher has used Fairclough's model because this model gives manifold aspects of logical, analytic, investigative and diagnostic entries.

According to Fairclough, the text is normally taken as a form of vocal or written language. It is so because in the current scenario, the text is multi semiotic, and basically, it appears in the shape of language. It also merges language with a number of multifaceted semiotic shapes. In this regard, television is a notable example that combines language with other semiotic forms like effects of sound, visual reflections and melody and tune. The same is the case with written language as it is also multi semiotic, not in the sense that it presents a number of pictures and illustrations, but in the present circumstances, the very design of a piece of paper also contributes to the collective evaluation of the written text. Thus text can be regarded as a linguistic, literary work of art, and we can build up methods to evaluate other forms of semiotics correlated with various shapes of language.

The background is white. Billboard C5 is of Firdous Lawn. There are seven different pictures of the same female wearing clothes of various colors that are perceptible.

Linguistic analysis of billboards of the different areas such as beauty items, food products, mobile phones, shoes and clothes have been done using Norman Fairclough’s model of critical discourse analysis (1995). The model has three layers. Subcategory A1 makes the textual analysis which is regarded as description. In this category, names and titles of the billboards, advertisements were described by the researcher. Additionally, in line with Fairclough \(1995\)’s proclamation that discourse is guarded by and placed in societal perspectives and these things give emphasis on those features of discourse that can be regarded as contextual. Besides this, Wodak \(2001\) is also of the view that if we want to know the correct use of language in a given text, it’s essential to envisage contextual aspects, which include the past history of occurrences. We also need to comprehend the social constructions, cultural standards, and substantial inheritances that discourse takes place within. The present linguistic analysis is in line with Fairclough (1995)’s three-dimensional way of discourse analysis, which observes that discourse is entrenched in the socio-cultural application at diverse stages that is, in the abrupt state of affairs, in the wider establishment or associations and at a social level (Fairclough, 1995). In this analysis, the researcher has observed how our concepts are shaped by a particular factors, which we observe from social perspectives. These social discursive approaches become part and parcel of our lives, and we are guided by them as well.

Conclusion

Advertisers, advertising agencies and marketing professionals work day and night to make their advertisements gorgeous, dazzling and good looking. All this is done on the demand of capitalists who have money and want to earn more and more. The researcher has observed that different linguistic expressions have been highlighted in the advertisements. Various emotional and social prospects have also been manipulated in these boards to change the ideas and dogmas of the people. The basic aim of the researcher is to uncover threes aspects and to discover how these elements are related to human psychology and how changes are brought in people’s outlook and behaviors.
